PARIS, May 5-In interviews which Lord Crewe has had with Raymond Poincaré, the French Premier, in Paris, and in similar Anglo-French conversations in London, important considerations have been laid before the French regarding the necessity for a common action. There is the deep-est regret that France and Belgium should reply separately to the German note, which interests England in the same degree, without consulting on the terms of the response with England.

It is true that France and Belgium disassociated themselves from England when they undertook the Ruhr enterprise, but that is no reason they should disassociate them-

Federal Courts Effective One effect of the repeal of the New York law which officials here are most anxious about, is the possible withdrawal of state police from the Canadian border, an action regarded as cer-tain to be a boon to border smugglers. Many additional Federal enforcement agents, in view of some officials, would be needed to handle this extra work with any degree of efficiency. Another result, it is pointed out, will be to throw all prosecutions of dry law violation into federal courts. Coast guard officials discounted suggestions today that smugglers would now transfer their efforts to the Canadian provinces, in the hope of mov-ing their commodities easily across the New York State border. There were others, however, who believed the whole situation as regards liquor smuggling along the North Atlantic coast would be substantially altered by repeal of the New York law.

The strike of street carmen at Lawrence today probably will be the only one at the present stage of negotiations between the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway and the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees over wage increases and working concessions demanded by the union, it was agreed by officials of both here today. The vote of the union members in the eight divisions of the road has been completed, although not tabulated, and indications are said to be that all other divisions favored arbitration of the differences.

The union asks an increase from the present rates of 54½ and 5½ cents an bour for two-man and for one-man cars, respectively, to 68 and 78 cents, for an eight-hour day, for restoration of seniority to non-uniformed employees, and for collection of union dues by the company when members fall to pay. Repeated glaring instances of cruelty to animals are related by inhabitants of near-by towns, and examples of brutal treatment meted out to animals straining to the utmost to carry out their drivers' wills are said to be easy to find. LEAGUE COMMITTEE EXAMINES OUESTION OF DOUBLE TAXATION

Theory of Residence as Against Origin Favored for Taxation, Pending Final Settlement

Special from Monitor Bureau LONDON, April 16-The committee of experts appointed by the League Nations to consider the question of double taxation has completed its report, which is now in the hands of the financial committee of the League. The report was drawn up by three distinguished economists, Professor Seligman of the United States, Sir Jo-siah Stamp of Great Britain, and Pro-fessor Bruins of Holland.

The report begins with a full analysis of the economic consequences of international double taxation which closely affects trade and the free flow of capital. It then discusses the fundamental bases which govern interna-tional competence in taxation.

QUEENSLAND'S PREMIER DISLIKES STANDARD RAILWAY GAUGE PLAN

South Australia Prefers Direct Route for North-South Line, but Eastern Route, It Is Said, Offers More Growth

Australia, and his attainment of this position may be nearer than many imagine. He cannot be regarded as an enthusiast for the uniform gauge scheme during the present economic position of the country. Queensland, like all the Australian states, finds her, railways an expensive necessity.

A Bold Suggestion Last year, Queensland, the great northern State of Australia, lost no less than £1,000,000 on her railways. The State is rich, and has possibly the brightest future of any part of Australia, but it cannot stand a constant and serious drain upon the financial resources of the people. A bold suggestion has been made by a prominent and distinguished Australian, that a syndicate of British financial houses should purchase and run the entire railway system of the Continent. This proposal was made in all seriousness, but the people of the Commonwealth would prefer to run their railways at a loss, rather than lose control, no matter what golden hopes might lie ahead.

There are wine "developmental" Last year, Queensland, the great lines with a mileage of 904. These lines cost about £4,500,000, and the interest alone absorbs over £200,000 a year. Last year, to earn £289,000, Queensland spent £279,000, and it is found that there was a loss of well over £193,000 exter deliting interest. over £193,000 after debiting interest and working costs.

There are of course other causes of the serious financial position of these railways, the chief being the isolated, or branch lines. These discouraging lines, some 75 in number, covering 3262 miles, have absorbed over £18,o00,000. These non-paying railway ventures comprise nearly 60 per cent of the total railway mileage of Queensland. Te Railways Commissioner, by way of apology for the unsound financial position, declares that: "No railways in Australia, or in fact, any railway, so far as I am aware, showed a profit after paying working expenses and interest last year." Generally speaking, Aus-tralians take little interest in their rallways, but they express mild sur-

North-South Line Discussed Federal authorities have been discussing the proposed north-south transcontinental line. It is usually introduced at election time—then shelved. There is an agitation, however, against the original and direct route, much to the indignation of South Australia, and Queensland frankly is doing all in its power to gain the line through her territory by deviation to Camooweal.

of the proposed uniform railway gauge scheme, involving conversion of existing Queensland lines to the 4ft. 3½in. standard which involved bridge construction across the Brisbane River, Edward Theodore, Promier of Queensland, observed that the first section of the scheme, linking capitals, would take six or seven years to complete from the time the work began. This clearly indicates that he is not optimistic regarding the progress of the vast standard gauge scheme.

Mr. Theodore's remarks have been the more noticed, as he is regarded as the next Labor Prime Minister of Australia, and his attainment of this position may be nearer than many

Monthly Budget Is More Favorable Than Was Expected-Monthly Deficit Smaller

Special from Monitor Bureau

LONDON, April 22—The Austrian Government, in agreement with the commissioner-general of the League of Nations, has drawn up the monthly budget, and for the second time the figures are more favorable than those which had been foreseen. which had been foreseen.

The League's provisional delegation and the Government agreed the average monthly expenditure during the first six months of the present year would be 719,000,000,000 of paper kronen. In January, expenditure amounted to 735.000,000,000 kronen, in February to 751,000,000,000 kronen (including heavy expenses rightly be-longing to the budget of the previous year), and in March to 718,000,000,000 kronen. The present budget lays down that this expenditure shall not exceed 690,000,000,000 kronen. It has to be remembered that the first two months of the year mark a period of transition, during which it was impossible for the reforms of the six months to take effect. The commissioner-general had, therefore, agreed to the January and February budgets, on condition that the excess over the monthly figure of 719,000,000,000 kronen should be made good in the following months of the period.

Smaller Monthly Deficit

The provisional delegation had reckoned the average monthly deficit for this same period at 339,000,000,000 paper kronen. The deficit, which was 404,000,000,000 kronen in January, fell to 372,000,000,000 kronen in February and to 308,000,000,000 kronen in March. The Government is therefore successfully recouping itself for the excess expenditure in January and February.

In his second monthly report to the League Council covering the period from Jan. 15 to Feb. 15, Dr. Zimmer-man expresses his satisfaction with this financial progress. He empha-sizes the necessity for courage and increasing energy in the Government when tackling the larger problems of organization, such as the reduction of ministries and the wholesale econo ministries and the wholesale economies that must still be realized if the budget is to be balanced within two years. In this connection he criticizes the proceedings of the extraordinary Cabinet council, and expresses the hope that factions opposition will be avoided in the future.

The report points out among other things that the currency in circulation amounted to 4,073;000,000,000 of paper kronen; that the printing presses have stopped absolutely, and that the exchange has remained stable at 14,438 paper kronen to one gold

Deficit to Be Reduced

As regards the economic situation, it is pointed out that in 1921 there was in adverse trade balance amounting the 795,000,000 gold kronen, whereas in 122 this had fallen to 544,000,000 kroten. Invisible exports, such as transit and banking, must contribute largely to reduce this deficit, and the commissioner-general remarks that nissioner-general remarks that 'Nething should be neglected which car contribute to restoring Vienna to he former position as a great busi-ness center."

indulged in an optimistic survey of events. Trade, he said, was reviving. Most piece goods had been sold and were going into consumption, making room for new business, but the speaker commented scathingly on the delays in the law courts, which he hoped that the Viceroy, as a practical lawyer, would take up. He hoped also that the five per cent export duty on hides and skins would be repealed, and that the suggested local taxation on the motor industry would not be

Mr. Grey welcomed the Inchcape committee's report, and said that nothing but ruin awaited India if the era of unbalanced budgets was persisted in. His comment on the salt tax was that he could hardly see why there should be such an outcry against raising a tax up to the level it previously stood at, when the poor were by no means so well off as they are today. A resolution was unanimously adopted urging the Government to grant the Chamber of Commerce two seats in the Punjab Provincial Council, and one in the Legislative Assembly. At present the Chamber only shared a seat with the Trades Association, whose interests were not always identical.

The Czechoslovakian artist, on the other hand, does not find the medium of the print a stilted form of art expression. He bends it to his will. Portraits, such as those by V. Svabinsky, are fired with the life they portray, with the earnestness, the power, the dramatic force of human personality.

Svabinsky posseses a versatile imag-ination. It has become almost a truism in America that an artist is branded for life with some definite subject type. He wins recognition in landscape, marine, or portraiture, and never thereafter deviates from the rut of his success. His public might re-sent a change. Svabinsky has not limited himself to any one type of selfexpression. He creates portraits, allegorical groups of figures, and religious themes symbolic of a nation besieged by the tortures of war and seeking in the darkness the glint of a single star. They are self-expressions of a nation which has passed through an emotional crisis, fraught with danger, peopled with great personalities, and vibrant with creative energy. Yet it is in no sense a chaotic art. It is purposeful, and fundamentally sound, with abundant promise for the future. Such are one's impressions of this

Czechoslovakian collection. One feels the love of the artist for his homeland Simon's interpretations of the highways and byways of Prague, cities and villages, or the joy of sleigh bells. Especially striking is the wintry view of Prague by F. Kobliha, one of the largest prints in the exhibition. There is biting keenness in the contrast of the white blanket of snow and the sharp black angles of buildings.

Color etchings by J. Stretti-Zamponi soften the contours, but reveal no less the nationality of the peasant folk at market on St. Nicholas Eve, or a more exuberant "Hradcany in Spring, Prague," where white massed blossoms shine in decorative splendor

New York Art Notes

Special from Monitor Bureau NEW YORK, May 3—A theatrical potpourri comes as a decided novelty even in a season where art has been considered from most every angle. The Artists' Galleries present the members of the theatrical profession, who are in some capacity practition-ers of art, in an exhibition which includes paintings, drawings, water colors, pastels, and sculpture. John Campbell's design for the Belasco production of "Dark Rosaleen," Walter Hale's pencil drawings of pictur-esque spots in Europe, Clifford Pem-ber's stage designs, Adele Klaer's fantasy portraits, sketches by Richard Mansfield, and portraits of stage ce lebrities by Joseph Mielziner are the outstanding items. Mr. Mielziner's gallery includes Arthur Hopkins, Brock Pemberton, Eugene O'Niell, Claire Eames, Owen Davis, Eva Le Gallienne, and Booth Tarkington. The exhibition is under the auspices of the Actors' Equity Association. At the same galleries are exhibitions of paintings by Della Shull-portraits and figure studies executed in flowing style with generous brushes—and landscapes by Helen Therese Damrosch of British Guiana and Switzer-

THE Palette and Chisel Club, holding its annual exhibition of paintings and sculpture at its own clubhouse, 1012 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, is a good example of a small, ideal association believing in art study, art for decoration, illustrate them. All three men are out of the ordinary. They are imaginative and industrious craftsmen. Of course this is a dold, practical way of looking at them. But it is appreciative and strives to be intelligent and not superficial. Good Work the Test

There is no sympathy for "isms" or slipshod work at the Palette and Chisel Club. Its member, Rudolph Ingerle, was president of the Chicago Society of Artists for two years and is a founder of the Society of Painters and Sculptors, and won the Chicago Society of Artists' Medal and sold a painting to the Municipal Art Gallery this year. Oskar Gross' painting "Salome" won the 1922 Municipal Art League Prize at the Palette and Chisel Club, and this season he exhibited at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine was the winner of the Municipal Art League's $100 prize this month, and so the Palette and Chisel Club goes on making history.

Martin Hennings of this group is showing paintings at Marshall Field & Co. of landscape with some figures, from Taos, N. M., in a very different vein from Mr. Ufer's picturesque work recently at Carson Pirle Scott & Co. Mr. Hennings' groves of aspens and thickets of desert vegetation have a beauty quite original. William Penhallow Henderson, from Santa Fé, now at the Carson Pirie Scott galleries, gives another fascinating point of view of desert life, emphasizing religious customs in Indian dances and a hu

ORDER OF EASTERN STAR TO CONVENE

About 1000 Officers, Delegates and Visitors to Gather at Springfield Next Week

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., May 5 (Special)-Grand officers, delegates and members of the Order of the Eastern Star of Massachusetts will gather in this city next week Thursday and Friday. May 10 and 11, for the fortyseventh annual convention of the Grand Chapter, which will be held in the Municipal Auditorium. Approximately 1000 officers, delegates and visitors are expected to be present from the subordinate chapters, which total nearly 200 and have a membership of about 48,000 in the State of Massachusetts.

Wednesday night, preceding the Grand Chapter sessions, the Matrons and Patrons Association of Massachusetts, made up of former heads of the various subordinate chapters, will hold its annual business meeting, with the election of officers, followed by a banquet. On Thursday evening the same association will have a re-ception, entertainment and dance for the benefit of the O. E. S. Home Fund.

Convention Opens

The convention will open on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, when Mrs. Viola F. Pettee, Gand Matron, and George A. Mosher, Grand Patron, accompanied by the other grand officers, will be escorted in after the assembly has been called to order by Mrs. Maude E. Wright, Past Grand Matron. The reception of flags will be followed by the opening of the Grand Chapter, a feature of which will be the address of welcome by Mayor Leonard and a response by Grand Patron Mosher. After the roll call of the grand officers, there will be receptions to visitors from other grand jurisdictions and the past matrons and patrons and others, with an address of welcome by Mrs. Jane Gray Payzant, Associate Grand Matron. Mrs. Nellie S. Rhodes, Deputy Grand

Rene Peroy of the Fencers' Club of New York has had a meteoric career. While he had fenced in Paris, he had not fenced since he came to the United States five years ago, until the start of this year's competition. He first took the junior foils and saber chamtook the junior foils and saber championships, and then captured the three weapon title. In the elimination contests he qualified, but not by a large margin, so that his showing in the semifinals and finals, when he took every bout, was especially impressive. Each had five victories and one defeat, but Schoonmaker, with the goal he had sought for so many years in plain sight, was irresistible, and allowed Dimond only one touch, winof the evening. and club officials said this morning that the meeting would continue. If the relations between the federa-tion and the club are severed, athletic authorities point out that France's success in the Olympic games next summer would be greatly endangered inasmuch as several university athletes competing in the present meet are regarded as probable point win-ners for France. They now appear to be courting disqualification. Colonel Garland, French Olympic greatly exercised over the situation. Frantz Reichel, who is secretary of the committee, as well as of the federation, has requested the president of avoid wrecking amateur athletics in France and spoiling whatever chances the country has of scoring points in the Olympic games. However, there seems to be a determination among the officials of the club to bring the whole question to a head in France as

FABER SHUTS DETROIT OUT

CHICAGO, May 4—U. C. Faber was in fine form today and shut out Detroit, holding the Tigers to six more or less scattered singles and a two-base hit by L. A. Blue. It was the White Sox veteran pitcher's first victory of the season after six attempts. The score:

PARIS, May 5 (By The Associated Press)—C. W. Paddock's decision to continue to participate in the international students' athletic meet, despite the announcement of his disqualification by the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States is apt to develop into a clean break between the French Athletic Federation and the Paris University Club which organized the competition. Things do not always go so smoothly in the minors. In the newly fermed Atlantic League, the Trenton, N. J., and Pottsville, Pa., teams were scheduled to play yesterday. Band music and other formalities awaited the start and other formalities awaited the start of the game, but in each city the visiting nine failed to show up. The reason was simple—both Pottsville and Trenton expected to open the season at home, so with the teams miles apart, there was no game. Trenton being the home team under a rearranged schedule, the game was awarded to it by the 9-to-0 forfeiture score.

Of the 11 men who took part in yesterday's game for Detroit, more than half did not play regularly with the Tigers last season. Manager T. R. Cobb believes in bringing the young idea to the fore, provided it is a worth-while idea

Airy fabrics of almost infinite variety are readily procurable in the widest range of prices. Plain colors, stripes, great and small, figures, colors simple or elaborate to suit every taste. The main idea is that they are seasonal and restful, giving variety from the regular and familiar hangings that are to be cleaned and laid away for a few months.

IN THEIR efforts to produce a factory record the tire manufacturers of Akron have made more tires and tubes than the market can absorb readily. The result is that within a short time the laying off of help, which is just beginning in a small way, will increase until it reaches its peak during the next few months. The leason of 1920 should have been learned well, but in spite of that experience, manufacturers have kept well ahead of sales demand, with the present result.

Despite the fact that April was a short working month, it is most likely that the production figures for cars and trucks of 346,000 will be exceeded. This is due to the fact that the smaller factories are increasing their output, which, together with the regular topnoted speed of the major plants, makes for the large total. With used cars in overabundance, the sale of new cars going slowly in places and the heavy production of motor vehicles, the lesson of the tire manufacturers may have to be learned in automobile centers, unproduction of motor vehicles, the lesson of the tire manufacturers may have to be learned in automobile centers, unless a new absorption record is created along with the production one.

The engine is said to develop 70 horsepower at 2200 revolutions per minute. The brakes on all four wheels are operated by pedal through a compensating mechanism which is designed to equalize the pressure on all brake shoes. The rear wheel drums contain two pair of brake shoes each, one pair operated by hand and the other by foot.

The gear ratios are as follows: First, 3.29 to 1; second, 1.61 to 1; third, 1 to 1: fourth, 0.78 to 1. Other parts include a multiple disc clutch, a rear axle overhead worm giving a 7.2 to 1 reduction, semielliptic springs measuring discounts.

PITCHING DUEL GOES 13 INNINGS

Boston, with R. W. Marquard in the box, defeated Brooklyn in 13 innings yesterday by a 1-to-0 score. The winning run was batted in after two hands had been retired. J. P. McInnis driving the ball to center field with Capt. W. H. Southworth on second. In a way Marquard was partly responsible for winning his own game, for his second single opened the thirteenth inning. When he reached the middle station, however, a substitute runner was put in, who promptly was caught off the base on a throw by the pitcher. But the Braves were not to be denied at this juncture and Souhworth's base on balls was followed by McInnis' hit, his third of the game. W. H. Reuther pitched air-tight ball for 10 innings, but when Southworth opened the eleventh he had to leave the box, to be succeeded by G. A. Smith. The score:

BIG POLO GAME SET FOR TODAY

West Point Meets Virginia M. I. at Fort Hamilton-Yale Starts Out Well

Special from Monitor Bureau NEW YORK, May 5-The pony polo maintained it throughout. teams of the United States Military Academy and the Virginia Military Institute were scheduled to meet this the two-mile race was a thriller with the field at Fort Hamil- but three inches between Williams of ton, in New York Harbor. Yale University made an exceed-ingly effective start toward winning the Intercollegiate Polo League championship yesterday when it defeated Cornell University in the opening match at Fort Hamilton. The match was very one-sided, the score being Yale made more goals in the first of the six chukkers than the total score of its opponents.

There were two contributing factors to the Yale victory. In the first place, W. H. P. Baldwin, No. 1 on that team, is a member of that family of horsemen, the Baldwins of Honolulu, Hawaii, He has ridden for many years, and his work was of extreme brilliancy. He scored in every chukker and made 12 goals in

In the second place the New Haven team were using their own ponies and this factor told greatly in the many rushes up and down the field.

On the other hand Cornell appeared handicapped by lack of outdoor prac-tice. It was noticeable that many of tice. It was noticeable that many of their strokes passed clear over the ball, as if they were accustomed to the larger ball used indoors. Lack of a suitable practice field might also have played a part in their failure at team play. They improved as the game progressed, especially in defensive work.

When Maj.-Gen. R. E. Bullard, U. S. A., who had been largely responsible for the organization of this first intercollegiate championship, had thrown in the first ball, Cornell carried it down with a rush, but failed to shoot the goal, the ball taking a bad direction. The Yale players retaliated, but R. L. Dean '23 fouled'

Dean '23 fouled in the scramble for the ball, giving Cornell a free shot for goal. W. K. Muir turned it back, however, and then Yale with more than five minutes of the first chukker gone, scored four goals in two minutes, two going to Baldwin, while S. C. Hopkins Jr. '23 and Dean accounted for the others. Cornell stiffened its defense in the second chukker, had scored again and held Yale for five minutes, before the Honolulu representative made his sec-

In the third Harold Headden '26 of Cornell made the first goal for his side by a finely timed rush down the field during the second minute of play, ending with a drive that went straight etween the posts from an angle. Yale made three more before the end. Dean taking the first and Baldwin contributing his regular quota of two. This placed Yale in the lead at half time, by a score of 9 to 1, Baldwin baving made 6.

In the next period, Baldwin broke loose soon after the start and shot in a goal at the end of the first minute. But R. H. White retaliated for Cornell a moment later on a long drive, almost from center. The balance of the chukker was close to the Cornell Winning every one of six matches, the of the game for Yale, and Baldwin getting his second as the period ended. But this was his only one in

WOMEN SWIMMERS MAY BRING SUIT

Legal Action Against A. A. U. May Be Resorted To

NEW YORK, May 5—It appears possible that legal action against the Amateur Athletic Union may be taken by J. A. Reilly, attorney for the Women's Swimming Association of New York, in connection with the A. A. U.'s decision on the appeal of the women from a general order barring all American amateurs from comme. all American amateurs from competition abroad.

sidered apart from the general con-troversy over the A. A. U.'s jurisdiction, upon which the regional officers are voting, and those deciding the appeal should have this in mind. Mr. Reilly wrote F. W. Rubien, national secretary of the A. A. U. The attorney complained that the form of ballot need is unfeited. lot used is unfair.

He accused Mr. Rubien of distorting the swimmers' appeal by sup-pressing some of the vital correspondence in the pamphlet issued on the controversy. That the women have agreed not to appear in exhibitions if they go abroad, that their amateur standing will be protected and that none of them would be permitted to compete when not in condition, Mr. Reilly said was omitted from the A. A. U. pamphlet.

BRANCH BANK MOTION DENIED WASHINGTON, May 3—The Supreme Court today denied the National City Bank and the Chemical National Bank of New York City permission to file briefs as friends of the court in the case brought by the First National Bank of St. Louis in support of the right of national banks to establish branches.

Children's Shoes

at Lower Cost per Year

There's no doubt about itchildren's shoes are quite an expense. Several pairs per year are needed to keep youngsters' feet well-shod.

But parents can save on shoe bills if they buy Coward Shoes. They stand the "gaff" so well, boys and girls usually need one or two pairs less per year.

Coward Children's Shoes are known nation-wide for comfort and fit. Our 50 years' experience in fine shoe building has made them a standard in children's footwear.

New York Stock Market Price Range for the Week Ended Saturday, May 5, 1923

REASON FOR THE BREAK IN STOCKS IS HARD TO FIND

Short-Selling and Liquidation Contribute—Business Good -Market Position

NEW YORK, May 5 (Special)—Often even experienced Wall Street inter-ests are at a loss to explain a sharp and rather protracted decline in stocks. No one is able to give very satisfactory reasons for the downward movement in prices this week.

The most general explanation is that it was the result of a concerted drive by the professional trading element. Undoubtedly there was considerable short-selling. The closest observers short-selling. The closest observers said that, in their judgment, there was fully as much actual liquidation.

Business conditions throughout the United States have not greatly. A determined effort on the part of housewives and others to bring down the retail price of sugar has been in progress, and with some suc-cess. There has been talk also of a somewhat general buyers' strike be-cause of the high prices of materials and lal . For the same reason there have been reports that building would restricted greatly for a time at least. All such movements have their effect, but those to which reference changed the general business situa-

Rusiness Still Good

Practically all the reports show that the volume of business and trade is still large and promises to continue Business men and bankers have dmitted within the last few days that there may be a little let-up temporarily. If there is they asserted that would help the general business position proportionately.

It is plain to be seen that there is growing disposition to guard against inflation in every direction. So long as this tendency prevails there should flation will develop. As was to have been expected, following the large May 1 disbursements, both time and call money, particularly the latter, became easier. The quota-tion for day-to-day accommodations dropped as low as 4 per cent, but-re-turned to 5 per cent in the last hour of business yesterday.

While special significance was not attached to this upturn, because of the fact that loans made today carry over until Monday, and because the higher quotation was reported after most of the loans for the day had been arranged, authorities on the money look for a stiffening in money rates as the mdidle of the month ap-be called upon to arrange for maturities in excess of $500,000,000. This will be in addition to large interest and dividend disbursements by cor-porations, financial institutions, and municipalities.

they will not use these proposals as a basis for further negotiations with the Germans apparently the occupa-tion of the Ruhr will continue, at least until an offer much more satisfactory to the French is made. In other words, the Franco-German situation will continue practically in deadlock. The reduction of 10 cents a barrel in the price of crude oil by the principal producers in the Mid-Continent field, and of 25 cents a barrel in the Pennsylvania field, might have been expected to adversely affect the market for oil stocks and the list as a whole. The fact is that the effect was scarcely appreciable. Wall Street had fully expected these reductions, and when they actually came took them as a matter of course. The oil industry ought to be helped rather than hindered by these price adjust-

Market Position Good

With the foregoing outline of conditions supposed to have a direct influence on the stock market, naturally it may be asked why the sharp breaks in prices this week. The best answer Railroad that can be given is that they were due to the condition of the stock market itself more than to anything outside of it. Many industrial stocks had been advanced for a long time. There was nothing on which to bid them to higher levels. Conservative observers thought they were too high already, and were strongly in favor of a sharp reaction. interests are recommending the purchase of the industrials as well as the rails. The latter have not changed much this week and are practically at the same level as a year ago.

The opinion is freely expressed that if railroad shares do not enjoy a more active market this summer no one can undertake to predict when they APRIL FINANCING IN UNITED STATES

WHEAT HAS LOSS 'AND CORN GAINS DURING THE WEEK

Liquidation of Wheat Checks Advance in Corn-Improved Foreign Demand

Special from Monitor Bureau CHICAGO, May 5-Net losses for the week in wheat, gains and losses in corn and oats, and losses in rye, marked the course of prices on the Chicago Board of Trade. Decided advances in corn, which reached a new crop high, were checked only by the liquidation in wheat as discouraged longs dumped the future deliveries of

While watching the irregular declines during the week, the conviction grew with many observers that strong and higher markets are in prospect. European stocks are low and the cables are good, indicating an improved foreign demand. Belief was expressed in several quarters that more export business is being done

Market Expected to Hold

Opening of navigation on the Great Lakes, reported yesterday from Mackinac, is an encouraging factor for the ments of corn and wheat from the United States and Canadian ports. After the break of this week, the uncertainty of the yields and the cer-tainty of demand, the market is expected to hold near to present levels until an advance comes.

Some uneasiness was felt yesterday, as the hoard operated for the first time under the grain futures act as a contract market. There was no reason for this feeling, because no changes were made in the customary procedures. It is not thought that any traders changed their positions on account of it.

Declines in wheat were started early in the week by speculative longs re-adjusting May holdings of wheat. Snow's estimate of the winter wheat crop anticipated a much larger yield than many traders expected. This, combined with generally favorable weather reports, had a bearish effect. Counter factors were strong Liver-pool futures, delays in northwestern seeding, and considerable export ship-

Corn at New High

Corn advanced to its new crop high of 81% cents for May while other grains lost. Local houses were aggressive, professionals and exporters supporting the market. Trade was much broader and a general belief in higher prices was evidenced. Selling met resistance on all dips.

Liquidation in May oats met good buying. Trade was active all week, cash interests furnishing an outlet for the May delivery. Large exports of rye to Germany and broader trading offset liquidating sympathy with wheat and gave rye an independent stability. There was no important

Wheat for May at $1.20% showed a loss of 4% cents from the high of last Saturday; July at $1.20 was down 3 cents, and September at $1.18% declined 21/2 cents.

Corn for May at 81 cents gained 1 cent; July at 81% cents was un-changed; September at 81 cents lost

Oats for May at 44% cents was down % cent; July at 44% cents gained % cent; September at 44 cents

Rye for May at 821/2 cents was off down 21/4 cents.

CHICAGO, May 5-The wheat market here had an upward tendency today during the early dealings.

The opening, which varied from unchanged figures to % cent higher, with July $1.18% @1.19, and September $1,17@1.171/8, was followed by moderate gains all around.
'After opening unchanged to % cent

After opening unchanged to % cent contracts higher, July 80% @81%c, the corn market scored a general advance.

Oats opened % to ¼ @% up, July 445%c., and later showed but little tendency to react. Provisions were inclined to sag.

TH SALES AT FALL RIVER SHOW GOOD INCREASE

FALL RIVER, Mass., May 5 (Special)—Prices having declined from one-eighth to one-quarter of a cent from last week's quotations in the cloth market on many styles, sales for this week show a slight increase over the reports of last week. AMES CASH PENNEY, president of the company bearing his name, heads a merchandising concern that does more than $50,000,000 worth of business annually through 371 stores in 29 states, from New

Mr. Penney shortly afterward entered the butcher business, but soon he realized that he could never make a success dependent upon the necessity of slaughter: it was not in his line. So he went to work for one T. M. Callahan, dry goods merchant, at Evanston, Wyo., who had charge of what was called the "Golden Rule Store.'

In 1902 Mr. Penney was sent to Kemmerer, Wyo., a small mining town, to open a store for Johnson & Callahan. He only received $50 a month but he had a third interest in the store, and in time that undertaking became the start of the J. C. Penney Company of today. He bought out his partners in 1908, and in 1913 incorporated the business. The idea of standardizing was applied along the lines of the "golden rule" plan. One price for all, cash trade, and a policy of service that drew customers.

Mr Penney has built up his organization by encouraging young men to develop their talents and educate themselves in the business, then offering them a partnership proposition when they showed promise of making

Hornblower & Weeks, Boston: If the moment at which the strongest drive at prices was timed has significance and the manner and viciousness of bear efforts have meaning according to prec-edent, then it signals nothing else than a culminating phase of the current re-

Hayden, Stone & Co., Boston: One thing is quite certain; the recent reaction has greatly improved the technical position. We should think that nical position. We should think that quite a decided recovery is likely, but the possibility of an extended upward movement from a level which is al ready high, is not very great, and advantage should be taken of any such

Elmer H. Bright & Co., Boston: Roughly speaking, a slight decline from current prices will afford buying opportunities as favorable as have been seen in 12 months, and those investors who look for a prolongation of present business activity will probably be attracted to the market by any further onspicuous recessions

There is no real reason for the belief that a bear market is in progress. If the bull market is over, future speculators in figuring out the trend of secu-rity prices will have a bull market to look back on which ended without credit stringency, without expanded inventories, without a marked increase of industrial plant facilities, without a industrial plant facilities, without a period of extravagance, without any general feeling of optimism and without untoward activity. Such a market would be unique in the annals of stock adjusted. This may take some time. When it is completed, business activity will be resumed. It would seem as if the stock market were forecasting this period of price readjustment.

 H-DEE-DOO-DEE-DOO-DY." The A familiar cry was heard within a yard or two of Charing Cross itself. The very cry, as a writer reminded us recently, "which Shakespeare was inspired to make into the culmination of the Bediam scene in 'King Lear,' the cry the editors cannot recognize because they have forgotten Punch, or never went to see him." But hearing it, the egrand boy, enjoying a dramatic culture more ancient, than that of the Shakespearean commentators, promptly forgets his errand; the policeman, directing with practiced echnique the futurist symphony of the Strand traffic, leaves buse taxis, and other "noise machines" to conduct or mis-conduct themselves; shop windows suddenly lose their attractions to loiterers, and, for a brief space, even business men defy that Figures with movable limbs have been discovered in the tombs of ancient Egypt and among the remains of Etruria. The Romans imported them from Greece. Cicero wrote, "Quid enim potest tam ridiculum quam sannio esse? Qui ore, vultu, imitandis motibus, voce, denique cor-pore ridetur ipso." The sannioni and the mimes were near ancestors, so to speak, of merry Arlecchino, who still provokes Romans to laughter with his head, mouth, actions, face, and

The Italians are perhaps alike in being somewhat rough and direct, and in choosing plastic and constructive modes of expression rather than impressionistic ones, and in that respect they differ, let me note, from Debussy."

Respighi Ottorino Respight he compared to Florent Schmitt and Paul Dukas of the French school, as representing a profound scholarship and a brilliant technique. Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco he called an out and out Tuscan, and he spoke of a strain of wit and irony in his music that makes him seem like a Florentine Ravel. Castelnuovo-Tedesco's most significant works, he he considered himself as carrying on any special historic line in his own composing; he answered that he did not, except that he thought his style might partake at times of Scarlatti's and again of Rossini's. "In my pieces," he went on to observe, "you will find both a tragic and a humorous purpose, with the tragic predominant. In that regard, I suppose I illustrate more or less the temperament of Italians. People may think of Italy as gay; but outside of Naples, it is not. Rome is severe, Tuscany is sad. Strong contrasts mark the Italian race, taken as a whole. But today, when we laugh in Italy it is hardly as they did in Rossini's time. We smile now with a certain contraction in our faces, instead of with the round, broad visage of 100 years ago. For myself, I have written but four or five pieces with explicit humorous intent. All the rest are quite different in their object. An example of them is my 'Elegia Eroica' for orchestra, which I expect will be roduced in New York next season."

'Stokey" and Company and Their Musical Menagerie

By FULLERTON WALDO

Philadelphia, April 26 AT THE end of a second sesson of experiment in concerts for childern with the Philadelphia Orchestra, Leopold Stokowski is happy in the complete success of the venture. He said to me the other day, "The little explanatory talks have been so well received that hereafter I intend to give the big babies (meaning his sedate adult audiences) more of the same kind of thing."

At the two final magnetic processors of the child thought, and has not forgotten the days when mais." The third episode, it will be recalled, is named enigmatically "Hemiones." "I have one of these," exclaimed the conductor, and he directed attendants to bring the mysterious creature from the wings, It turned Instead of playing the work straight out to be a brown and white pony, most amiable of demeanor, which munched carrots and manifested a keen interest in the work of two child planists (the Misses Loeben and Behrends), who were auxiliary to the orchestra in the performance of the "Carnival.

An Elephant as Trumpeter

When the episode marked "The Elephant" came, a gray baby elephant made his appearance. While the double basses were playing the slow, swinging melody, he swayed a little, said, were his two cycles of songs, as if meditating a dance. Instead of Upon my asking Mr. Casella whether that, he raised his trunk and trumpeted a mighty blast. The children were in transports of delight, and shouted with glee. The little elephant, seeing he had made a hit, trumpeted the instrumental performance. Nothing less than an elephant could destroy the equilibrium of this band.

On the program was a composition dren at each concert was exceedingly wide, and included many things not on the programs of the season. Thus, the Tschaikowsky "1812" overture was wanted by 63 children. The lilting 'Blue Danube' waltz was requested period has been 50 minutes, to avoid by 47. Other works in the lead, with the votes were: Valkyries' Ride, 27; Schubert's "Moment Musical," 21; selections from the operetta "Blossom Time," 20; Anitra's Dance from Grieg'

Telling the Story

These children's concerts are ar come in groups accompanied by a teacher. The performances are ful-filling the hopes that the forward-looking part of our citizenry, espe-cially the womenfolk, have entertained for them. It has been necessary to to other cities for the orchestra to enable the juvenile series to be given, but the results have already demonness of the enterprise.

Mr. Stokowski, whom the children call "Stokey," has found that it greatly enhances the effect of the music to tell the children a story, such as that of Peer Gynt or William Tell. When

At the two final programs he introduced animals of several species, to exemplify that delightful whimsy of Saint-Saëns, "The Carnival of the Animals." The third enisces of the choristers! Indeed, it was the English tradition of games that prompted his selection of one of his capital achievements-through from start to finish, he detached the dozen episodes of which it, is composed, one from another, and gave their themes; then he had the work played in its vivacious and whimsical entirety. Each section has for its text a familiar nursery rhyme. When it came to "There was a lady loved a swine," he said; "Everything that is young and small is lovely— even little pigs are quite nice." In "A frog he would a-wooing go," the piccolos, as Mr. Stokowski's gloss made clear, disported themselves aboundingly. Perhaps it was leapfrog they were playing. Their festive skirmishing evoked the loud delight of the juvenile listeners. When it came to "Oranges and lemons" the leader announced. "You may sing or dance if you feel like it." But none of the little ones took advantage of the permission to wriggle down from the plush-backed seats into the aisles, so enthralled was each by the sounds selected from previous programs as from the stage. Thus we find Gray accused of lack of imagination by one, of lack of body by another. Yet when the dispassionate student of poetry turns to the works themselves for evidence, he is pleasantly disappointed.

Gray's letters are an interesting study, because in them we find almost the first signs in English poetry of romantic enjoyment of naturethe love of mountains and wild spaces so beloved by Byron and Wordsworth, so mistrusted by the more matter-offact Addison and Pope. With Gray, this new sense for nature first becomes

But it is not only in his keen appreciation of nature that Gray was in ivance of his time and points to the age to come. He was one of the first to turn to the past for his in-spiration—to the mighty Old Norse Sagas, and to the Celtic fairy lore. To adequately reproduce that grim Norse spirit a man of more rude vigor than Gray was demanded: it is doubtful whether anyone reared in the school of the eighteenth century could have reproduced it with any fullness. (Wagner in his music has done more than anyone else to interpret it to the modern world.) ERTAIN poets, however varied their achievement, are destined to be known as writers of a single poem. This is notably true in the case of Thomas Gray—the poet of the famous "Elegy." His reputation has indeed suffered at the hands of friend as well as foe. Dr. Johnson, with the peculiar obliquity which often marked that great man, denounces him in sledge-hammer fashion:

"Sir, I do not think Gray a first-rate poet. He has not a bold imagination, nor much command of words. The obscurity in which he has involved himself, will not persuade us that he is sublime."

Arnold, on the other hand, includes him in the ranks of the classics, ranks from which Chaucer and Burns have been reluctantly excluded; but even while doing so he adds: "He is the scantiest and frailest of the classics."

An invitation had come for an overnight visit to a friend's caravan which had been brought within five miles of the Great Pyramid. The Poet, my companion on this occasion also, and I, were on tiptoe over this opportunity to get our first glimpse of desert life and rode out fin the golden afternoon to this very juxurious camp which IT IS claimed of King Solomon, one of the most prominent figures in Bible history, that he built up his renowned wisdom on a foundation of humility. When he had been elected ruler over Israel, he talked with God about his sense of unfitness, stating that he was like a little child, not knowing where to begin, and that he needed "an understanding heart" and no wrong is meant, nor even when it needed "an understanding heart" and discernment, in order to fill his great office acceptably to God. This humble The Bible records many instances confession prepared him to receive of sweet humility. When Jesus asked God's gift of wisdom to a very marked the one healed who was born blind extent. And when, late in May, she stands revealed in all the loveliness of nature's full bloom, it is to charm men's eyes with a beauty quite indescribable.

In front, of the Great Pyramid of Gizeh, between it and the Meneh House, had been built a stage of heroic worth. It is a nature lyric written in 1786, twelve years become with the budding of ten thouse of Night'; that he was a pioneer in three quarters of an hour brought us to a scene, the grandeur, charm and mystery of which it seems impossible to portray. It remains stamped upon mystery of which it seems impossible to portray. It remains stamped upon mystery of which it seems impossible to portray. It remains stamped upon mystery of which it seems impossible to portray. It remains stamped upon mystery of which it seems impossible to portray. It is not a scene, the grandeur with the eye upon the object, without recellection of other poetry, and it draws from the humble flower a lesson for humanity in the true Wordsworthian manner. Before Freneau, American poetry had been full of the eglantine, the yew, and the Baby-lonian willow, the nightingale, the lark—the flora and the fauna of Hebrew and British bards. Classic Engnose dramatically uplifted, a brown St. Gallen, if one be energetic enough arching curtain. On the Pyramid itself actual landscape and had been about as British in background as the "Eclogues" of Vergil. In Freneau we find for the first time the actual life of the American forest—the wild pink, the elm, the wild honeysuckle, the pump-kin, the blackbird, the squirrel, the "loquacious whippoorwill" — and in addition to this the varied life of the American tropic islands. We find for the first time examples of that true humble and even vulgar things; that furthermore, like Burns, culd draw from the phenomena of lowly nature deep lessons for human life. He sees the reflection of the stars in the

And from this he draws the obvious moral. Consider what Pope would have said of mud. Indeed, to appreciate Freneau, one must habituate one's self to the atmosphere of the classic age and view things from the classic point of view. Whether Freneau influenced the school of poets who in England broke away from the eight-eenth century methods it is useless to ask. We may observe, however, that Freneau's poems were known and read freely in England at the dawn of and that even Scott could "lift" without comment a whole line from one of them .- Fred Lewis Pattee, in "Side-

THE revelation of the enormous accumulation of wealth by the Ford Motor Company, made by the filing of its annual statement this week, attracts attention to the fact that Mr. Ford has been free, in the main, from the attacks commonly made on the accumulators of great wealth. He and his only son own the whole of the capital stock of the company.

Their net profits last year were $119,000,000. The cash holdings of the company deposited in various banks amounted on Feb. 28 to over $159,000,000. The two men together are believed to be the richest men in the world, and are certainly in enjoyment of the largest individual income possessed by any capitalists of today. People who like to figure on the comparative wealth of great captains of industry assert that the revenues of John D. Rockefeller have been greater than those of Ford, but that his lavish gifts to various charities and foundations have reduced his capital below the Ford level. The only corporation with a larger holding of cash and securities in the United States than the Fords' is the United States Steel Corporation, but that corporation has something more than 170,000 stockholders. The holdings of the Ford Company are possessed by two men only-father

Amazing as it is that so colossal a fortune should have been accumulated in the space of twenty years, for twenty years ago Ford was a bookkeeper on a slender salary, it is, perhaps, even more astonishing that its accumulation should have been accompanied by so little public hostility. Most great fortunes have been built up, either by the exercise of some special privilege, obtained and maintained by the corruption of legislative bodies, or else by methods akin to the law of the jungle. The average captain of industry climbs upward over the bruised and prostrate bodies of his rivals. The railroad multimillionaire has too often achieved his eminence at the cost of reorganizations and receiverships that have beggared thousands. The fortune founded on financial operations in Wall Street is apt to be a fortune acquired by the methods of the buccaneer. Against the Carnegies, the Rockefellers, the Goulds, the Morgans, there have always been directed savage attacks, based upon either ethical or legalistic grounds. Against Ford there has been apparently no public criticism directed whatsoever.

Even labor, organized labor, ordinarily so tenacious of its privileges, is virtually quiescent in contemplation of the Ford success. More than any one man or group of men, he has made Detroit a nonunion city, but in doing it he led the way in paying high wages, and making high wages pay him. But for all his refusal to recognize union labor in his shops, we find no outcry against his product raised by the spokesmen of union labor, and his cars are owned and driven generally by men who hold union cards. It is a curious phenomenon that on one of the touchiest points in the organization of industry Mr. Ford, without yielding one single iota, has been able to avoid any controversy whatsoever.

It of course is not probable that he has attained his eminence and his enormous wealth without personal antagonisms. The great mortality among chief executives in the Ford works is a matter of notoriety, and has been commented upon in the very searching study of his life and methods made by his former director of welfare, Samuel S. Marquis. Few men have been able to work with him after they had attained anything like prominence in his organization. But he usually made them rich before quietly crowding them out. Nor is there lacking acrid comment upon the failure of those who shared in his earlier, and abortive, efforts to get a car upon the market to reap any part of the golden flood that attended his ultimate success. There are stockholders in the earlier Ford corporations who wonder that there should never have come to them some recompense for the money they lost in those futile experiments that led up to the ultimate

It cannot be said that Mr. Ford has purchased his immunity from hostile criticism by lavish deeds of charity. He is no philanthropist, nor has he sought to use ostentatious philanthropy as a bribe to public opinion. A great hospital in Detroit bears his name. But it is perhaps the one monument to his public benefactions. What his private charities may be, no one knows. And yet it may well be questioned whether he has not contributed more to human welfare and happiness, and will not in future contribute more than any philanthropist, by his policy of extending the opportunities for employment and making the employment remunerative when the conditions of production make it impossible for him to let it be either pleasant or interesting. Mr. Ford frankly says that he believes that in extending his industrial activities, and thereby multiplying the number of opportunities for men to be self-supporting, he does more for humanity than he could by creating foundations for the investigation of economic conditions, or by establishing great funds, from the income of which the world is to be more generally medicated than it is today. He admits that present-day industrial conditions, compelling quantity production as the end most to be sought, are reducing men in certain branches of industry to the level of machines, but his proposition is that while they are serving as machines they should be paid so that in their leisure hours they may live comfortably and have opportunity for rational enjoyment and self-improvement. He holds also that ultimately the hours of labor can be so materially reduced that the purely mechanical operations involved in earning a livelihood will fill so little a portion of a man's day that he can materially improve himself in the greater leisure which will come to him. There is logic in the Ford contention, and the world will watch with interest to see how progressively he shall carry it into effect.

In a wider and more notable way the achievement of Henry Ford has done and is still doing one great public good. He is demonstrating to those who study social phenomena intelligently that the mere accumulation of money is not in itself a menace to society, or a crime against social organization. It is the method by which it is accumulated and the use to which it is put that provokes natural resentment, when either is hostile to the public welfare. Mr. Ford has had no special privileges granted to him by law in which others might not share, upon which to build his enormous edifice of wealth. And if he has occasionally used the power that that wealth gave him rather foolishly, as in the case of the peace ship and his journalistic attack upon the Jews, no one has suffered but himself. In the main, he has employed it to furnish at the lowest possible price a useful mechanical adjunct to man's convenience and happiness. In so doing, he has widely extended the field of employment, and paid those who have served him a liberal wage, measured by present industrial standards. It is improbable that so great a sum of money as he now controls could be more usefully administered for the general good in any other individual hands. Certainly the records of governmental inefficiency suggest that it has contributed far more to the public welfare, as administered by Henry Ford, than it would be if it were part of the capital of the Nation as a commonwealth.

THE day-by-day events in the Ruhr have perhaps" ceased to absorb an American audience, but the political development of the European problem must remain of burning interest. There are two elections approaching which increase this interest. One of them is in the United States, the other is in France. Efforts will undoubtedly be made at any rate by certain sections of the Republicans to confine the issue of the American presidential election to domestic mat-ters; but if the "full dinner pail" shall be an important subject, the Democratic Party is not alone in recognizing the need for a clean-cut foreign policy, and all indications point to a new concentration of interest on the League of Nations, on the International Court of Justice, and on Franco-German relations. It is too early to speculate on the result, but there is certainly a growing consciousness of the impossibility of the United States or any other nation shutting itself up in an ivory tower and disregarding the march of events "over there" in

To understand the European situation, it is necessary to remember that elections there, too, complicate everything. Next May, at the latest-a year hence-there will be a renewal of the present French Parliament, dominated by the Bloc National. It may be that the elections will be hastened: there is talk of M. Poincaré, if the Ruhr operations are conducted to anything that may be represented as a success, suddenly, with the President of the Republic and of the Senate, dissolving the Chamber. Those who believe in this possibility think the elections will be held in September of this year.

It is thought probable that the Bloc National will sweep back to power. Should there be complete failure, however, there may be a swing to the Left. But even this hypothesis should not be taken too seriously. The fact is that it has become, without any real evidence, fashionable to speak of a swing to the Left. The best observers, however, see very few signs of it. All electoral forecasts are hazardous, however, though it is obvious that any attempt at a Franco-German settlement will be complicated by reason of the fact that French politicians will have their eyes fixed on the elections.

France is particularly susceptible to the beating of the big drum, the blowing of the patriotic trumpet, and this is going to be a very important factor in determining the events of the coming year. Whether we like it or not, we have to reckon with these natural feelings, and it is precisely because the French elections are in sight that it will not be easy to arrive at a true understanding with Germany while electoral considerations are uppermost in the thoughts of many.

We have here one of the hardest problems which those who are sincere believers in democracy have to solve. It may well have been that without some supposed demand from "public opinion," without some supposed advantage in the electoral battle, the occupation of the Ruhr would never have taken place. It is certain. at any rate, that this fear of public opinion, this regard for the elections, will make it almost impossible for any politician to evacuate the Ruhr or reduce French claims to what is probably Germany's capacity of payment. In point of fact, the public understands more about economics and about politics than it is usually given credit for, or at least it has an instinct which if left alone would not often lead it astray. But demagogues, by harping on the patriotic chord, by appealing to feelings of fear and of hatred, by abusing the sentiment of nationality, can strike terror into those more moderate statesmen who would work for peace and harmony but who are afraid of an easily excited public opinion.

Though perhaps not quite so spectacular in some respects as the transatlantic flight in 1919 of Sir John

Aviation's - Latest Achievement

Alcock and Sir Arthur W. Brown, from Newfoundland to Ireland, a distance of about 1800 miles, the transcontinental nonstop flight of Lieuts. Oakley G. Kelly and John A. Macready, from Hempstead, L. I., to San Diego, Cal., marks an epoch in the history of aviation even more memorable. Moreover, the fact that these same two men last November, starting in the same machine, the T-2, from San Diego, failed in a similar effort in the opposite direction, makes their successful achievement in this instance all the more fitting. On that occasion they traveled well over 2000 miles, being forced to land at Indianapolis, owing to their engine failing them, when a cylinder cracked under the tremendous strain of the flying in rapidly changing climatic conditions. The course pursued the other day was practically as the birds are reputed to fly, the distance actually covered being nearly 2700 miles, and the time taken for the flight being a few minutes less than twenty-seven hours, or an average of about 100 miles an hour, continuous flying. The feat constitutes an accomplishment of which the aviators themselves, all who helped to make it possible, and the entire Nation, are justified in being proud.

As was only to be expected, the trip was not made without many incidents and experiences of interest, not the least of which was associated with the fact that it looked, soon after the flyers left New York, as if they would have to turn back, owing to the voltage regulator failing to work. This difficulty was, however, successfully overcome by Macready, and thereafter fortune smiled upon the travelers, the voyage being completed without further untoward happenings.

Some two decades ago aviation became an accomplished fact in America. About one decade ago, the real advances began to be made which placed an airplane upon a really practical basis. Who will say what one or two decades more will bring forth?

"HARPISM" and "harpistic," words given a certain currency by the Eolian Review, the official magazine of the National Association of Harpists, may look and sound queer. But for all that, they are very plausibly formed, in spite of little flaws in the etymological chain. They possess, like the instrument to which they apply, an ancestry. Likewise, doctrines taught in the pages of the review may seem strange, and even slightly ridiculous, to the casual reader; and yet they stand on historic foundations and they react favorably to classic tests. Granted, indeed, that those who write for the harpists' publication affect certain oddities of vocabulary, they nevertheless seek the material of their coinage in antiquity; granted, too, that they here and there set forth scandalously peculiar ideas, they base their thinking, just the same, on authentic tradition.

To consider not only how the harp players disclose their aims in print, but also how they carry them out in organization, there is the record of their recent annual convention, held at Providence, R. I. Again, sentiment was scrupulously faithful to the past. The policies approved at the convention and put in operation by the officers since elected, are as conservative as could be imagined. For, in the first place, old masters are set up as models for study; and, in the second place, the theory of artists proving their right to professional standing by passing an examination before an official jury is accepted.

Among the composers whose works are declared to be fundamental in the harp player's education are Bach and Haydn. Not that Bach and Haydn wrote for the harp. For their instruments were the clavichord and the harpsichord, respectively. But it is maintained that the harp more nearly represents their instruments than does the piano, though the piano, in having a keyboard, happens to bear the closer outward resemblance. At any rate, to Bach is ascribed a true inner feeling for "harpism," and to Haydn a genuine "harpistic" insight.

Back to the eighteenth century, then, the harpists go for the beginning of their art. But what of the nineteenth? They rather completely leave it out, on the ground, apparently, that the famous men of that time, including Bochsa, Parish-Alvars, Oberthür, and Godefroid, though remarkable harp executants, knew not "harpism." As for the twentieth century, they accept that. Into the company of Bach and Haydn they admit Pierné, Debussy, and Salzedo; and they give notice that "harpistic" understanding will count more with the examiners than technical display.

The harpists take a position that can be easily understood, and that perhaps cannot be assailed. At the same time, their obliteration of the nineteenth century must seem to many persons somewhat forced. The musical public, after all, will be the jury to decide who is a harp player and who not. This jury may be supposed to make its examination in a more simple manner than the association officials make theirs. It may be conceived as requiring candidates for professional rating to show understanding merely, quite regardless of whether they show a "harpistic" understanding, or some other good kind.

Editorial Notes

IF IT did not represent so nearly a tragedy, the interview which the Vatan in Constantinople recently published with Admiral Chester, in which the latter pictures the wonderful reforms which, he says, will come under the new régime, would constitute an excellent instance of comedy. He speaks of asphalt pavements, blocks of new apartment houses, dining cars, and motor plows, while dilating on the general future prosperity of Anatolia as a result of the changes which, he declares, will be made under his concession, in such a "rosy" manner that the Turkish journalist, who was interviewing him, says he believed himself to be dreaming! And to think that the whole world apparently has allowed itself to be taken in by such a line of talk.

It is generally admitted even by those who are working for the return of liquor in the United States that the saloon was always wrong and never should be restored. So much is conceded by those lawyers who argue for liquor ponderously, technically, and without regard for the welfare of humanity. But the conceded guilt of the saloon brings up an important and interesting question of jurisprudence. Everybody agrees that the saloon was only an accessory. If a verdict of guilty is found against that agency, what becomes of the principal in the case? Surely logic and common sense would not permit liquor, the chief conspirator, to escape.

Politics in Britain

The Crisis in the Conservative Party

LONDON, April 18 (Special Correspondence)-The reference which was made last week to the instability of the present Government has been strikingly exemplified by the commotion caused by the announcement recently made in some Sunday papers that Mr. Bonar Law had made up his mind to resign as soon as possible. The story was exaggerated, but that there was some foundation for it is certain. To understand what happened, however, or to comprehend what will happen in the next few months, it is necessary to go back to the inside story of the general election.

The collapse of the Lloyd George Coalition was precipitated by three factors. In the first place, the extremer members of the Conservative Party, commonly known as the Diehards, had made up their minds after the settlement with Sinn Fein that never again would they go to an election to support Mr. Lloyd George. They were sufficiently strong in their control of the machine to force Sir George Younger, the party manager, to give Mr. Lloyd George public notice to this effect in February, 1922. Immediately after that came the series of failures by Mr. Lloyd George to settle European discord at the conferences of Cannes, Genoa and London. Finally came the attempt of the Lloyd George Cabinet, last October, to override the Diehard resistance and to force the Conservative Party to go to another general election on a Coalition ticket. This produced the meeting of the party at the Carlton Club. Lord Balfour, Mr. Chamberlain, Lord Birkenhead, Sir Robert Horne and the majority of the Conservative members of the Cabinet were for continuing the Coalition under Mr. Lloyd George. Mr. Stanley Baldwin and a majority of the undersecretaries were bent on ending it and recovering freedom for the Conservative Party from the gentle but none the less compelling leading strings of the "Welsh Wizard."

Everything depended on Mr. Bonar Law. Eighteen months before he had been forced to resign by physical disability, and he was the one Conservative leader, of first-class authority, who was not in office. As all remember, he plumped for the termination of the Coalition, the majority of the Conservative Party went with him, and the war government of Mr. Lloyd George was at an end. The Conservative leaders who had been for the continuance of the Coalition, generally known as the Chamberlainites, thus thrown over by their party, refused to join with Mr. Bonar Law, who thereupon held his election on the ticket of tranquillity and with a makeshift government, consisting of peers from the House of Lords and promoted undersecretaries, and, probably to his own surprise, was returned with a small but adequate majority. It was never Mr. Bonar Law's purpose, however, to catry on the government, as he had formed it, for very long. He doubted his personal strength, he still-more doubted the ability of the team he had to drive, to stand up to the formidable debating talent among the Opposition, or to deal successfully with the complicated international, economic and domestic prob-lems clamoring for solution. It was always his intention, at an early date, to make way for the return of the dissident Chamberlainites. They were mostly ex-ministers. They were men of great experience and debating power. They constituted, in fact, exactly that element which the Conservative Party needed if it was to live out its constitutional term of office with reasonable success and credit. It was Mr. Bonar Law's idea that before very long the erring sheep should return to the true Conservative fold and that after a respectable period, he should resign the leadership of a reunited party in favor of Mr. Chamberlain or some other acceptable leader.

. . . . But, as so often happens in politics, lions began to in the path. The first difficulty was the strong feeling on the part of the Chamberlainites. They felt that they had been deserted by their party; they believed that in rejecting coalition it had made a mistake, and they were not at all anxious for any form of reconciliation which looked like eating humble pie. They believed that the Conservative Government could not last long without them, and that if they stood out long enough they would come back, not by creeping in by a back door, but on their own terms and in control of the most important offices in the Ministry. The second difficulty was that the Diehards, having found themselves the dominant factor in the new Government, began to dig themselves in still more strongly in the control of the party machine, the recent appointment of Sir Reginald Hall, the successful head of the naval intelligence service during the war, being a demonstration of their power. They are not at all willing that the Chamberlainites, who represent the progressive and moderate wing of the Conservative Party, should come back and as part of the conditions of reunion should recover control of the party machinery from 4 4 4

There is no doubt that Mr. Bonar Law's speechlessness and various Parliamentary muddles precipitated last week what in diplomatic language are called conversations about a possible basis for a reconciliation of the two wings. There is equally little doubt that no basis has yet been found. Neither the Chamberlainites nor the Diehards are ready to make the necessary concessions. So Mr. Bonar Law, despite his undoubted desire both for unity and retirement, has been forced to "carry on" until times are more propitious for his plan. When that will be, no one can forecast. Some people put it within a few weeks. Some believe that the Government will carry on till the end of the year. There is an ominous date some time in July after which any change in ministerial portfolios will involve a dangerous series of by-elections, for ministerial changes can be made without by-elections only for the first nine months after a general election. It really depends partly upon Mr. Bonar Law's physical condition and partly on whether the Ministry can get through its parliamentary business without more blunders such as those they have made in the last month or two. In any event, the revival of the question of the reunion of the Conservative Party, and of a fresh trial of strength within the party between the Diehards and the Progressives for the control of its future, is only a question of time.

From 'The Rota Clubbe' to Rotary Clubs

ALTHOUGH gatherings at which abstract political questions have been discussed have existed for many years (Chaucer was a member of "La Court de Bone Compagnie"), it was in 1659 in London that the word "clubbe" was first used in this connection. This was when Milton, Marvel, Cyriac Skinner, Harrington, Nevill and other notables of the day gathered in the evening 'at one Miles, the next house to the Starre, where was made purposely a large oval table with a passage in the middle," and formed "The Rota Clubbe." Incidentally the word "Rota" originated with the idea formulated by the members that the Members of Parliament should be changed by actation.
